Conſtantinople, July 24. Our Apprehenſions with regard to the Plague are fully confirmed by many Accidents which have happened in different Parts of this Reſidence, and in two Greek Villages ſituated on the Canal. It is probable the Diſorder was brought hither from Ceres, nigh Salonica, (where it has broken out with Violence) as it was at firſt confined to the People who trade in thoſe Parts. At preſent it begins to ſpread, and, as the Weather is very moiſt and unſettled, there is great Reaſon to fear it will become general.

Yeſterday Evening, about Six o'Clock, a Fire broke out at Conſtantinople, in a Quarter called Balatta, moſtly inhabited by Jews. As the Wind was rather high, the Flames ſpread with ſuch Rapidity, that, notwithſtanding every Effort, in about Three Hours the whole City was threatened with Deſtruction. It is impoſſible to paint the horrid Scene exhibited by this alarming Conflagration, which raged with equal Violence for about Fifteen Hours, and ſpread through one of the moſt inhabited Parts of the Town. The Number of Houſes deſtroyed is computed at Ten Thouſand, beſides Moſques, Churches, and other Public Edifices.

At this Inſtant, (Three o'Clock P. M.) the Fire, which had appeared nearly extinguiſhed, broke out anew in Three diſtinct Places, and proceeds in different Directions. The Wind, which had fallen, is again pretty high, and the greateſt Apprehenſions are now entertained for the Fate of the City. The Grand Signior, Vizir, and all the Grandees, have attended theſe Seventeen Hours, to encourage the Exertions of the People to check the Progreſs of the Flames.

Victualling-Office, Auguſt 16, 1782.

Copthall Buildings, August 16, 1782.

ON the Night of Friday the Second Instant, my Counting-house in Copthall Buildings, Throgmorton-street, was broke open; and a Box, mark'd 1781, and a small Case of Drawers, carried away from it; they contained Papers, among which was a Bill of Exchange, drawn by Pat. Deane, Esq; of Dublin, on me for 19l. 0s. 11d. to Order of Mr. F. Cruise, and one drawn by Dom. Duany, Esq; of Warfield, for 15l. to Order of William Lawrence; the first was accepted, but not endorsed; the latter was not accepted: There were also a considerable Number of Bills of Exchange on me, which I paid in the Course of last Year, as well as a Number of my Drafts, on Mess. Fullers, Sons, and Vaughan, which were discharged by them during that Period: As Attempts may be made to obtain Value for some of these, I take this Method of cautioning the Public against being imposed on by any such.

A few of the Papers contained in the Box were found in the last Week near Whitechapel, and have been restored to me; should the Remainder come into the Possession of any Person by similar Means, I will pay such Person Ten Pounds on his delivering them to me; and I will pay Twenty Pounds to any Person who discovers the Perpetrator or Perpetrators of this Felony, so that he or they may be convicted of it.
